

LOVE BIRDS

I recently saw a video of two swans that had been kept apart while the female swan was treated at a veterinary hospital. When the female swan was released back into her homeland, she and her partner swam towards one another. When they were close enough, their foreheads touched and they lingered for several moments before swimming off together into the distance.

It was lovely to witness their expression of love, each for the other. We often describe couples in love as 'love birds'. And, here was a perfect example of such love, directly from our feathered friends. We often consider a couple lucky if they have found such love. But is it really a matter of luck? It has often been said that the harder one works, the luckier one gets. This expression was originally coined for the professional world. However, it may equally apply in one's personal life. So, what kind of work does it take to get lucky in love? There are four steps to being lucky in love:

Step 1: Find the Love of Your Life: We may each meet many potential life partners before we find the one that we want to spend the rest of our lives with. Whoever that person may be, that person needs to be right for you AND you need to be right for them. When that happens, the love between you both will emerge, develop and blossom to a point where you both know you want to spend the rest of your lives together.

Step 2: Learn the Operating Manual for Your Life Partner's Brain: Both members of a couple need to learn the operating manual for their life partner's brain. In so doing, each member of the couple knows what drives the other, what makes them happy and what doesn't. In so doing, each member of the couple is best placed to provide the other with the most nurturing, loving environment for their life partner. In turn, both members of the couple are able to grow individually, as well as continuing to grow together as a couple.

Step 3: Learn Your Life Partner's Moods and Signals: Both members of a couple need to be able to recognise their partner's mood simply by looking upon their life partner's face and/or posture. In so doing, each member of the couple is well-placed to enhance their life partner's positive moods while minimising negative ones. It is also helpful for each member of the couple to know their life partner's non-verbal signals. In so doing, each member of the couple can communicate with one other without the need for words to be spoken. This is something that can be continually honed and refined over time.

Step 4: Know Your Life Partner's Preferred Love Language: We all have our own way of expressing love for another person. We may express our love through physical touch, quality time, gifts, words of affirmation and/or acts of service. When members of a couple speak in their partner's preferred love language, the partner feels genuinely loved and cared for. Couples will naturally find it easy to speak their partner's love language when both members of the couple have shared or overlapping love languages. When this is not the case, it becomes imperative that each member of a couple know, and use, their partner's preferred love language.

In the music industry, they say it takes 40 years to become an overnight success. So, too, in relationships, it may take a lifetime to nurture our most precious relationships. So, what will you do to nurture your most precious relationship from this day forth?

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

In the Science of Getting Rich, author Wallace D. Wattles believes that there is a certain mindset required in order to become wealthy. Whilst he does not use the language we use today (his book was originally written in the 1920s), his ideas reflect an abundance mindset along with the use of visualisation to train our subconscious mind towards what we want in life. The power of the subconscious mind was just as powerful back then as it is today. So, what will you do to tap into the power of your own subconscious mind, today?
