

HOW DO YOU KNOW?

How do you know when a relationship has come to an end or whether it is worth pursuing? Relationships can be deeply significant. They may define us. So, it may take a long time to reach an answer to a question of this nature. Let alone, act upon your decision. If you are asking this question of yourself, you may be feeling sad, frustrated, confused, lonely, alone, unsupported, underappreciated and perhaps even unloved.

This issue of HQ will provide some questions that may prove useful in ultimately answering this one big question for yourself. The first three questions require a simple yes/no answer. The remaining questions are more reflective. It is often more instructive to know why you answered in a particular way, rather than the direction of your answer to any one question.

Question 1: Are you, and your loved ones, safe and free from physical, psychological or emotional harm?

Question 2: Do you still love your life partner?

Question 3: Does your partner still love you?

Question 4: Is there something, that if addressed, would help restore the relationship you once had?

Question 5: Is there something, that if learnt, would help restore the relationship you once had?

Question 6: Would you and your partner be willing to do what's necessary to restore the relationship?

Question 7: Would you be comfortable discussing your concerns with your partner?

Regardless of whether you choose to stay or leave your life partner, you may find it beneficial to reach out to family and friends for emotional support. You may also benefit from relationship counselling (on your own or with your partner). See also The Holy Grail of Relationships, HQ,16(4)-17(1), Speaking Your Partner's Language of Love, HQ,17(4)-18(1) and Love Birds, HQ,20(2-3).

At the end of the day, we all deserve to be in a loving relationship, with a partner who cares about us and treats us well. So, take your time, do what's right for you and be sure to be kind to yourself as you work your way through this process.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

We are often asked what we want to be when we grow up. A more interesting question might be who do you want to be when you grow up.

By reflecting on who we want to be and what we stand for, we can make small changes to better represent our personal aspirations. In so doing, we can ensure that we are the best versions of ourselves going forward. At the end of the day, we can all be more of who we aspire to be. So, who do you want to be when you grow up?
